

TUESDAY

The moon rose, illuminating the silent pond below. "There is something in the air tonight and I don't like it," thought Gary, nervously looking around at his friends jumping around having fun. Without warning, he could feel himself levitating. "What's happening" stuttered Gary. The lily pads, which were full of frogs, floated into the night sky.

They slowly rose higher. Gary was feeling worried and ill. He wasn't expecting this to happen. He could hear enjoyment and laughter from other frogs in the distance. "Come on Gary," urged Richard. Taking a deep breath, Gary tightened his grip on his lily pad calming himself down. Up they flew into the sky racing around. Next to them were the birds who were scared by the sight of the frogs. "This is not so bad," said Garry smiling at Richard.

They flew into the dark sky, Gary loosening his grip with each house they passed. "I bet he can't believe what he is seeing," laughed Richard, as they zoomed past a window with a man eating his sandwich." He's dropped his sandwich," laughed Gary, waving at the opened mouthed man. "You're getting more confident," smiled Richard as they made their way into a chimney of a large old house. Gary and Richard slowly made their way down the dusty chimney. In a puff of smoke the frogs appeared. They were in an old ladies house – and it was full of cats. Gary stopped to watch TV, but suddenly a vicious dog chased all of the frogs. As quick as a flash, they scattered out of the house and into the garden.

After they had escaped the vicious dog, Gary and Richard rose higher. But then they noticed they were slowly dropping. "OH NO!" cried Gary as he tightened his grip on his lily pad. "The lily pads are going to..." Richard stopped as he fell through the sky, landing in a field far from their pond. After a long journey, they finally made it back to their pond.

After a long sleep, Gary said "I can't believe I was scared at the start that was so fun." "I wish it never ended," said Richard in disbelief.
